"The Microanalytics of Revolutions: A Sociological Appraisal"

In the past years, there has been a steady tendency to reappraise revolutionary events through microsociological lenses as well as a move to leave behind big structural explanations of revolutions in favor of more localized and historicized analyses. The « Arab Spring » has largely contributed to this change. Based on my doctoral research on the Egyptian Revolution, I argue for a more realistic approach of revolutionary situations, which situates itself at an equal distance from structural causalist theories and the rational choice model. Through a variety of sources, this perspective aims at restoring the «concrete materiality» of revolutions and delving into the microanalytics of revolutions.

Youssef El Chazli is a postdoctoral researcher at the French National Center for Scientific Research (CNRS), currently based at the Centre Marc Bloch in Berlin, as a part of the ERC-DRafting and Enacting the Revolutions in the Arab Mediterranean (DREAM). He holds a dual PhD in political science from the universities of Lausanne (Switzerland) and Paris 1 Panthéon Sorbonne (France). He has published articles and book chapters in Arabic, English, and French, both in academic settings and for the general public.
